Drupal in Higher Ed

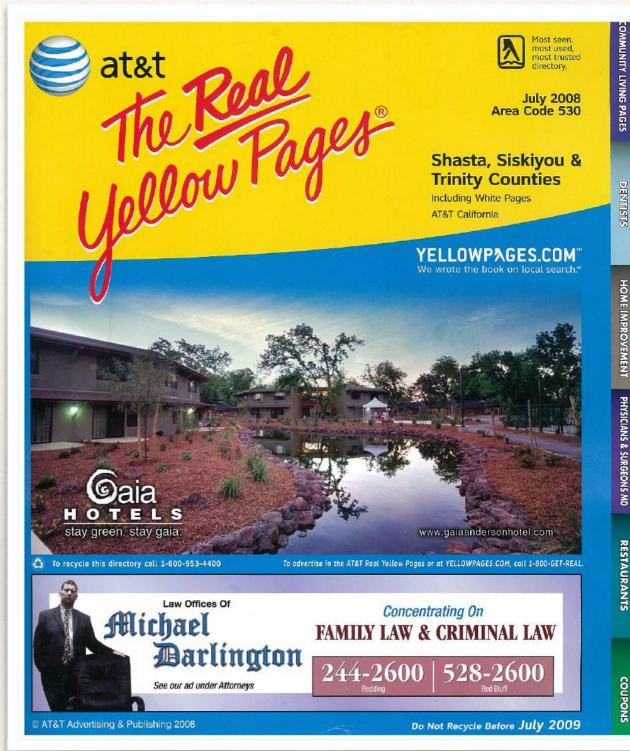

New hosting options from Pantheon and Acquia bring efficiency to academic web development Ed Carlevale Front-End Drupal Developer

February 18, 2016

"Today's fiefdom is tomorrow's dead end"

Academic Web Development Today is like a telephone book

That's why there's little pressure to get it right. The front lines of communication have moved to Facebook, Google, Amazon and Twitter.

DENINGI

HOME IMPROVEMENT

And yet getting it right is important for Drupal and Academia

There is a massive need for academic websites, and only Drupal as far as I can see is in a position to efficiently deliver those sites.

And there is also a need for academia to participate in the public conversation. This is the reason I became a developer in the first place.

Recommendations

1. Library-based walk-in web support

They're spread all over campus, and Libraries are natural partners for academic web development.

Miscellaneous suggestions

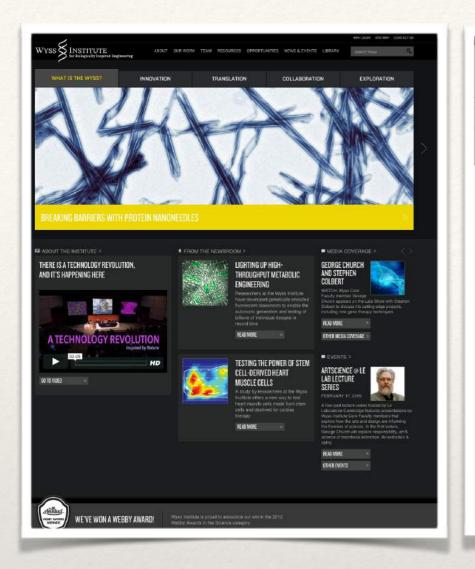

2. Paid theme development support for undergraduates

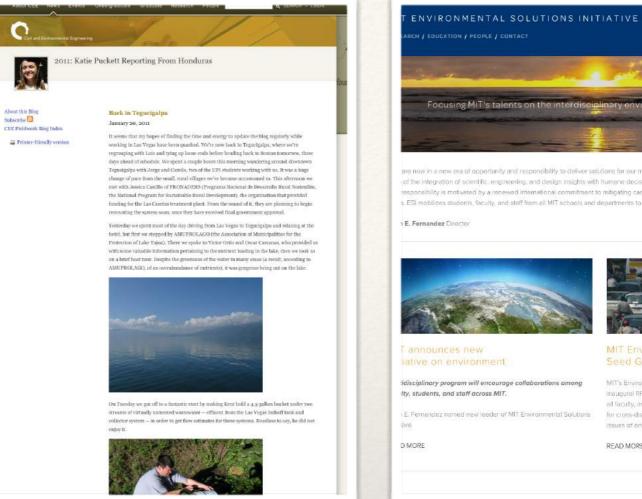

Students would hit the ball out of the park delivering school specific themes, and they bring great, out-of-thebox thinking to the work.
